REPORT:

Economical, societal and cultural developments in industrialized countries push for educational innovation with Information and Communication Technology (ICT) as an important enabling factor. Moving from industrial to knowledge intensive economies there is a need for modern professionals, knowledge workers with new qualifications. For the modern professional, lifelong working is identical with lifelong learning; the modern professional is a learning professional. Innovation is the driving force in a knowledge intensive economy and for innovation new knowledge is needed. The modern professional therefore is a knowledge creating professional.
